

THE FISHERIES SECTOR: FROM CATCH TO CONSUMER

Part 2 of a 5-Part Series

30th August, 2026

Exploring Opportunities Across the Fisheries Value Chain

In Part 1, we explored the Pre-harvest stage of the fisheries value chain - inputs and support services that make fish production possible. From fish feed, fingerlings and fishing gear to finance, technology and technical advice, these essential services create diverse business and career opportunities while strengthening the productivity, safety and sustainability of the fisheries sector.

In this 2nd segment, we explore the Fish Production and Harvest stage.

2

Fish Production and Harvesting - Where fish enters the value chain

Fish enters the value chain through capture fisheries - where fish is harvested from oceans, rivers, lakes and lagoons, or through aquaculture - where fish is raised in ponds, tanks, cages and other managed systems for harvesting.

In capture fisheries, fishermen must identify suitable fishing locations, handle fishery gear, navigate safely and comply with fisheries regulations. Fisheries officers, researchers and monitoring professionals also help assist fish stocks, collect data and promote responsible fishing. Aquaculture includes selecting suitable species and production sites, stocking healthy fingerlings, managing water quality, feeding fish, preventing disease and harvesting at this appropriate time.

Business Opportunities to Explore

Sustainable artisanal fishing enterprise

Fisheries data collection and analysis

Fish-harvesting services

Safety and compliance services

Pond, tank and cage aquaculture

Aquaculture farm management

Digital services for production and harvesting

Cooperative production enterprises

Possible Career Pathways

- Aquaculture entrepreneur
- Artisanal / Commercial fisher
- Fisheries cooperative manager
- Marine biologist
- Fisheries officer
- Fisheries data analyst
- Fisheries observer
- Fishing gear technologist
- GIS and remote-sensing specialist
- Fisheries compliance and enforcement officer